

Get a piece of the action at the Royal Marines Museum

From the 16th to the 18th of February at 11am, 1pm and 3pm, the Royal Marines Museum at Southsea will be playing host to Keeping the Peace - a range of fun activities for the half-term that the whole family can enjoy!

Peace keeping is a difficult task. The Museum's half term activities will put you in the place of a Royal Marine on a non combat mission. With Commando exercise games, the event will give you a taste for some of the operations the Royal Marines are involved in around the world.

From clearing minefields and supplying camps to keeping refugees safe, these are all the kinds of things you can expect to learn more about with Keeping the Peace. With activities taking place at 11am, 1pm and 3pm each day of the event, there is no reason to miss out! "The Museum's family activities always prove popular and engaging for our visitors, and Keeping the Peace will be no exception" said Sandy Wilson, Marketing Manager at the Museum, "Rest assured, after taking part in the activities, visitors will have a very good idea of how demanding non-combat operations can be";

The Museum is open to visitors throughout the year, from 10am to 5pm. Fully accessible by wheelchair, and with a wide range of Special Events during the year, further details on the Museum can be found at www.royalmarinesmuseum.co.uk or by calling 023 9281 9385.
